Painting in the Venetian Method

This course is designed to guide students through the process of developing a painting using the traditional techniques of indirect painting. The traditional methods of indirect painting will be explored through the development of a fully realized monochromatic underpainting upon which thin layers of paint are applied to achieve the effects of the Old Masters. The painting will develop through the application of thin layers of paint and glazing, allowing the underpainting to come through. Two approaches, the Open Form and the Closed Form will be introduced in this course. Students will create two complete still life paintings, one in each of the two approaches.

Students will expect to accomplish:

- Luminosity and depth in their paintings
- Ability to model form using value and temperature
- An understanding of the difference between glazes and velaturas
- An understanding of the nature of pigments and effects of painting mediums.
